DIRECTOR ANDRÉS GALLEGOS

Born in Chile, Andrés discovered his passion for films in Santiago, where he graduated with a degree in audio-visual communications. Motivated by his passion for films, Andrés moved to the Bay Area to earn his MFA in Cinema at SFSU, where he graduated with the Graduate Award for Distinguished Achievement.

He has made two fiction films and six short documentaries as a director; and has shot more than fifteen short films and six feature films as a cinematographer.

During 2017, he directed three short documentaries and one narrative short film.

In 2018, He went to Israel to shoot “Objector”, a feature documentary directed by Molly Stuart. During his stay, he directed a short documentary titled “Guy Hircefeld: A Guy with a Camera”, that tells the story of an ex Israeli soldier who now fights against the occupation.

DIRECTOR STATEMENT

ANDRÉS GALLEGOS

Like any art form, cinema is constantly looking for mutations; mutations to create new representations of the human condition. I think that the cinematic experience is a theatrical illusion that uses narrative or non-narrative structures as a technic for interpersonal persuasion. I strongly believe that one of the key goals of cinema is to expand the conciseness of society. The democratization of film production has changed the rules of the game, allowing the rising of new cinematic visions. Exciting!
